Due to the nature of assessed coursework, we adopt a more flexible approach to the timetabling of homework at Key Stage 4. Pupils are often asked to spend an extended length of time, (often over a period of several weeks), on a single piece of coursework and subject teachers, therefore, use their professional judgement to decide what other homework, (if any), best fits around this commitment. Our aim is to engender in our pupils a responsibility for their own learning and to manage the workload that comes with this learning.

To this end, we also ask that pupils in Key Stage 4 take on responsibility for some independent learning during the week, to enhance and improve their subject skills, understanding and knowledge, e.g. booking time with the school's foreign language assistants, attending after school sessions, reading through revision material provided, etc.
